

Caregiver Reporting Guide

How to Report a Scam Affecting an Older Adult

Recognize the Warning Signs

An older adult may have been targeted if they:

- Become secretive about finances
- Receive frequent notifications from strangers
- Suddenly send money or gift cards
- Show unexplained bank withdrawals
- Express fear, confusion, or embarrassment about a financial situation

If you notice any of these signs in an older adult, you should investigate further.

Gather Important Information

After investigation, if you realize that the older adult has indeed been scammed, gather important information to create a report. You can use the Evidence Collection Worksheet available on our website as well as the Scam Incident Report Worksheet. It is critical to make sure to save all evidence of the scam.

Report the Scam

Depending on the situation, determine which organization should receive the scam report. You can utilize the Scam Reporting Directory on our website.

Protect and Provide Support

It is important to take immediate steps to prevent further risk. These steps are available on the “What to Do if You Think You Have Been Scammed” document. Additionally, many older adults express sadness or embarrassment after experiencing a scam, so it is important to provide support and reassurance and avoid criticizing them.